The Bag of Gold.

There lived, near Bologna, in northern Italy, a widow lady of the Lambertini family, called Madonna Lucrexia, who in a revolution of the State had known the bitterness of poverty, and had even begged her bread, kneeling, day after day like a statue, at the gate of the cathedral, her rosary in her left hand, and her right held out for charity, her long black yeil concealing a face that once adorned a court, and had received the homage of as many sonnets as Petrarch has written on Laura. But fortune had at length relented; a legacy from a distant relation had come to her relief, and she was the mistress of a small inn at the foot of the Appenines, for peace, the terms offered by the pride and where those only stopped who were where she entertained as well as she could, of Louis was so monstrous that they, the contented with a little.
